

#WinterResidentials

Launching in Autumn this year, the Council for Learning Outside the Classroom and the Learning Away Consortium are promoting #WinterResidentials for schools.

Supporting statements so far show:

- * There is time for learning and development to be embedded back in school – the Learning Away programme discovered that residentials are especially likely to have a long term impact on students and on attainment in particular, when followed up on students return to school.
- * They foster deeper relationships which are sustained back in school – relationships between staff and students become more trusting and respectful. Students get to know teachers as individuals; staff gain a better understanding of their students and how to respond to them which can benefit throughout the rest of the school year. So the sooner the teachers know their pupils and ‘set them up for success’ the better, and residentials play a crucial role in achieving this.
- * They are more affordable and therefore inclusive for all students – reduced rates and discounts available over the winter months.
